

Longshadow Aussie Puppy Diet

This is the diet (raw) your puppy was started on and fed to about 6 wks. Since most will be fed a kibble, I do send them home adjusted to a moist kibble (Victor). Either, if fed as directed will provide a well balanced diet. I do recommend advancing to either my adult diet or to a large breed puppy kibble at 4-6 months to maintain slow and even growth to maturity. Please try to keep your pup slim and trim. A fat pudgy puppy is very cute, but it can cause great stress to young bones.

Meal AM and PM:

- Three or four ounces of either hamburger, ground or cubed chicken, beef or chicken liver, sliced beef heart, kidney or chicken gizzards. I alternate these thru the week.
 - Two or three heaping tablespoons cooked white rice (brown is harder to digest)
 - One egg 2-3 times a week
- Two tablespoons pulped vegetables. I combine carrots and squash or pumpkin, canned or fresh steamed. Mix the meat and vegetables well. Use baby food veggies, if fresh is unavailable.

(Bedtime, Play or Midday snack)

-Chicken necks, wings or beef rib bones. These bones are a good choice for recreational chewing and while crate training.

I strongly recommend these additions

Add to AM OR PM meal (once a day) with either a raw or kibble diet:

VetriScience Canine Plus Multi Vitamin (Amazon $11)

Probiotic Powder I use Doc Roy's GI Synbiotics Granules ($25 at revivalanimal.com)

Vitamin C Powder 1/4 tsp. or 250mg. daily Ester-C Supplement ($23 at Amazon)

If you choose to feed a kibble diet, here are two I've used and can recommend. Victor Hi Pro Plus (blue bag). Victor is a small US company with several 5 star rated kibbles for both young and adult. can be ordered on Chewy.com or purchased at Tractor Supply. Tractor Supply's 4-Health Puppy is also well rated and an excellent choice at a very reasonable price.

If needed, the best flea/tick med for my dogs is Revolution spot on. Some lines tolerate different types and brands, mine seem to do best with this one. Chewables most likely will come right back up!
